

National Republican

MONDAY MORNING ···· MAR 6, 1879.

The Senator of Arkansas was not yet discovered by all who advertised. A good deal of money and space is wasted in trifling announcements, which nobody reads, heavy standing placards, which no one stimulates purchases than the advertisements themselves. "More money is also wasted on signs." More money is also wasted on cursive, which are not only entries and drowses, and always relate with contempt, or in so-called advertising sheets, which nobody reads. There is no medium that comes into such close contact with the people as the newspaper; and it advertises only underhand. The name of the paper is lost, as the name of the paper is lost, as any other part of it. In many of the German papers advertising is carried to an extent of which we have no idea. The newspaper is the real exchange. Everybody goes to it with all his wants, and almost all his woes. The advertisements that are there are as large as neighborhood signs, and often the pages devoted to advertising are the best parts of the paper. And the papers are read through. The announcements are always short, always "present," and now, look at them in the mirror to see what they are. The paper is the mirror of the world of business or amusement. Perhaps his next door neighbor has a new piece of chain or a whole carriage to sell; or he would like to get an odd number of some serial, which you would happen to have somewhere, somewhere, announced something about it. The paper is the best part of the paper. And the papers are read through. The announcements are always short, always "present," and now, look at them in the mirror to see what they are. The paper is the mirror of the world of business or amusement.

Communicated.—

The Merchant Money Question.

In an interview with the Committee of Public Buildings and Grounds on the market-house question, the Hon. F. P. Stanton stated, that he would read a paper "prepared with great care by Mr. Glaser, the architect of the company, which will give a full account of the expenses of the proposed Hotel and Market House." He said that the paper would be read before the Constitutional Convention.
